Senior Fellow, International Center for Leadership in Education (ICLE)

Eric Sheninger has quickly emerged as a thought leader on implementing technology to transform learning, teaching, and community engagement. Eric's work focuses on preparing children to enter a world of professions that don't yet exist while creating sustainable models for leading and learning to move schools and districts forward in a digital era.

During his tenure as Principal of New Milford High School, the school became a globally recognized model for innovative practices. From launching one of the first Bring Your Own Device (BYOD) initiatives in New Jersey, to breaking down communication barriers with the local community through social media, Eric and his team navigated many of the challenges schools throughout the country face as they grapple with preparing students for college and careers.

Eric has received many honors, including a Bammy Award, 2013; NASSP Digital Principal Award, 2012; PDK Emerging Leader Award, 2012; Learning Forward's Excellence in Professional Practice Award, 2012; and he was named to the NSBA "20 to Watch" list for technology leadership, 2010. TIME Magazine identified his handle as one of the 140 Best Twitter Feeds, 2014, and Edublogs named his blog, A Principals' Reflections, as Best School Administrator Blog, 2011 and 2013. Eric now presents and speaks nationally to assist other school leaders in embracing and effectively utilizing technology.
